The primary motivation of OBM is to modify and adapt organizational systems, structures, and processes to produce high levels of human and competitive business performance. Requisite steps are identifying person and system specific goals, determining the factors that promote productive and nonproductive work by employees, implementing change procedures, and evaluating performance outcomes.