Some adults with intellectual disabilities have oral feeding dependency, which may reduce aspiration risk, minimize lower respiratory infection, fortify nutritional intake, and sustain hydration (Clarke et al., 2013; Harvey et al., 2019). Notably, these are critical and beneficial health outcomes that prolong a better quality of life.